Dear Dr. Kenner,

I believe that I am still a good candidate for a B to A- grade. It is evident that, despite my issues regarding timeliness, I go above and beyond what is required of me. I again went out of my way to provide an engaging and unique format. By recontextualizing the material I learn, I am engaging in Engaged Pedagogy, helping me truly understand and personalize the material. I believe that my work is worthy of either an A or B grade as it matches the rubric. I have completed all assignments, and my work engages with the class ideas in a thoughtful manner. I believe my work does develop and improve as the class goes on, and does exhibit, to a certain extent, progress towards my learning goals. In the design ethics and justice section of my learning essay, I talk about how I have become motivated and interested in my work, enough that my relationship with it has improved.

Since the Midterm meeting, I have implemented all of the previous feedback, such as more focus on learning goals and patching missing research questions.

Below is how I developed my research goals.

- Fostering a positive relationship with my work
  - The freedom to be able to present my progress in whatever manner I want, in this case a website, helped me enjoy the process of work.
- learn how to apply my knowledge outside of its own classroom
  - One of the biggest examples of this improvement is my tiny project. I have mixed my personal life, other classes and the knowledge I built here in order to produce a paper I am proud of.
- Improving time management
  - I have struggled with this throughout my whole school life, and did not expect this class to function as behavioural therapy, but I still think it has helped me. Despite me turning this in late, I am still proud of myself. I am proud of myself because despite having to deal with a significantly stressful event in my personal life whilst in the middle of my finals, I managed to produce work that I am proud of in all of my classes, and that is thanks to my steady improvement.

You can find all the required material for this assignment on the website. Thank you for reviewing my work and self-assessment.

Sincerely,

Marc Daubert
